

China sets anti-dumping duties on EU TDI imports

China's Ministry of Commerce (MOC) will impose anti-dumping duties ranging between 6.6 % and 37.7 % on imported toluene diisocyanate (TDI) from the European Union, starting from Wednesday, 13 March 2013.

The duties will last for five years, according to a ministry statement released Tuesday, 12 March 2013. The final ruling came after the ministry found that the domestic industry has been "substantially" harmed by the EU's dumping of TDI in its investigations, which began last March.
