

Küttner founds subsidiary in Russia

Küttner Industrieberatungs GmbH, Speyer, Germany, has announced that it has founded a Russian subsidiary, OOO Küttner, based in Moscow.

The CEOs of the German holding company, Jürgen Meder and Arno Endres are featuring long-term know-how and experience in the rubber industry as well as of the Russian market. They are prognosticating a high market potential for the subsidiary's further development and will accompany its market launch. The novel company will act as a distributor for raw materials, like the German holding but also as representative for machinery and plants for the rubber and plastics processing. The fast-growing Russian automotive industry and therefore its suppliers have a high demand for polymers, fillers, additives and also for modern equipment, says Küttner. The consultancy for the development of technical components made of rubber and TPE will play a major part in the company's business activities, like in Germany.

Contact and linking persons between the German holding and the Russian subsidiary will be Arno Endres and Alexander Kling. Kling has been studying in Russia and in Germany and – because of his bilingualism – is a predestined contact person in Russian and in German.
